SUMMARY JUDGMENT

12 vs.

14 Defendants.

19 I. INTRODUCTION

20 This is a patent infringement case filed by Acacia Medial Technologies Corporation against a 21 number of entities for infringement of the Yurt family of patents. While multiple claims were 22 pending in the Central District of California, Plaintiff filed infringement claims against additional 23 entities in the Northern District of California and in other Districts elsewhere in the United States.
24 The case was accepted for administration as a Multi-District Litigation. During the claim 25 construction process, Plaintiff withdrew some of its patents from contention, dismissed some of the 26 Defendants and stipulated to not sue others. Based on the construction which the Court has given to 27 the claims of the patents-in-suit, Plaintiff now moves for summary judgment on all claims and 28

1 counterclaims.¹ Although the motion is unusual in that Plaintiff moves for summary judgment
2 against itself and in favor of Defendants, the Court finds that the motion is meritorious. For the 3 reasons stated below, the Court orders all remaining parties to appear and show cause why summary
4 judgment should not be entered in favor of Defendants on the ground that as construed by the Court, 5 none of the patent claims-in-suit are infringed; each of the patent claims-in suit are invalid; and the 6 patent claims-in-suit are unenforceable.

7 II. DISCUSSION

8 This case has a long procedural history, which can be readily discerned from the multiple 9 Orders made by the Court. To place the present motion in context, the Court reviews the most 10 recent events.

11 The Court divided its construction of the various disputed words and phrases into various 12 groups, followed by Orders pertaining to those groups.² On February 13, 2008, the Court issued its 13 Order construing the last group of disputed terms. In various claim construction Orders, there were 14 instances when the Court stated its conclusion that a word or phrase made an asserted patent claim 15 arguably indefinite. The Court invited the parties to submit any proposal for adjudicating the 16 indefiniteness issue. Plaintiff took the position that the Court's claim construction rendered all of 17 the remaining patents-in-suit indefinite. Plaintiff proposed that rather than reach the issue of 18 infringement, it urged the Court to bifurcate the indefiniteness issue from the remaining issues in the 19 case, enter a judgment on that issue and certify the bifurcated judgment for immediate appeal. The 20 Court expressed reluctance to bifurcate the case, preferring rather to consider all legal motions
21 which any party might raise based on the claim construction Orders before making a determination
22 with respect to a dispositive ruling in the case. Consequently, on May 27, 2008, the Court adopted a 23

24 ¹ (Motion for Summary Judgment Pursuant to FRCP 56 on Acacia's Patent Infringement
25 Claims and on Defendants' Counterclaims for Patent Invalidity, hereafter, "Motion," Docket Item
26 No. 287.)

27 ² (See Order Re: Motions for Reconsideration of Claim Construction; Fifth Claim 28 Construction Order, Docket Item No. 259.)

1 schedule for adjudication of the indefiniteness issues and any other legal issues which arise from the 2 claim construction Orders. (See Docket Item No. 282.)

3 In the midst of the scheduled briefing period and with an express intent to avoid having to 4 brief and argue multiple motions being made by Defendants, Plaintiff has filed the present motion
5 for summary judgment. In the motion, Plaintiff contends that based on the claim construction
6 Orders, there is no genuine issue of material fact remaining in the case:

7 Plaintiff Acacia Medial Technologies Corporation (“Acacia”) will move, and hereby 8 does move, for summary judgment pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 in favor of 9 defendants on Acacia’s patent infringement claims and on defendants’ counterclaims
10 for patent invalidity.³

11 (Motion at 2.) Plaintiff’s motion is presently set for hearing on October 20, 2008.

12 Although it is highly unorthodox for a party to move for summary judgment against itself, 13 there is nothing in Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 56 which prohibits such a motion.⁴ The express language of 14 Rule 56(a) allows a party “claiming relief” and Rule 56(b) allows a party “against whom relief is 15 sought” to “move for summary judgment.” See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a), (b). Neither subsection
16 restricts the motion to being in favor of the moving party. Rule 56(c), which sets out the conditions 17 under which a moving party is entitled to “judgment as a matter of law,” contains no requirement as 18 to in whose favor the judgment must be rendered. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

19 The Court is mindful that it should not allow a motion for summary judgment to operate as a 20 disguised interlocutory appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). Here, because Acacia’s motion 21 seeks adjudication on all liability issues in the case, which if granted would result in a final 22 adjudication, the Court does not regard its motion as a motion to permit an interlocutory appeal.

23 The Court is also mindful that, like any other pre-trial order, until the commencement of jury
24 deliberations, the Court has the right to reconsider its claim construction Orders and to modify them.

25 ³ In its motion, Plaintiff uses the word “counterclaim” to refer the claims of Defendants.
26 Since Plaintiff seeks to bring the lawsuit to a full and final end in this Court, the Court regards the 27 motion as directed to all of the affirmative defenses of Defendants—invalidity and unenforceability 28 are affirmative defenses and not counterclaims.

⁴ The Court is not aware of any other case in which a Plaintiff has moved for summary judgment against itself.

1 See Smith v. Pac. Props. & Dev. Corp., 358 F.3d 1097, 1100 (9th Cir. 2004). Indeed, Plaintiff has 2 sought reconsideration by the Court of the Orders at issue in this case. However, there is no basis 3 for finding, and none of the parties contend that there are any circumstances which would lead the 4 Court to modify its construction of the words and phrases of the subject patents.

5 Apparently, Plaintiff takes the position that even though it is moving for summary judgment
6 against itself, this does not waive its right to appeal.⁵ The Court considers that in ruling on Acacia's
7 motion for summary judgment against itself, the Court will not be called upon to express a view on 8 the effect of Acacia's right to appeal.

9 III. CONCLUSION

10 The Court considers that Acacia's motion empowers the Court to immediately grant 11 summary judgment in favor of all remaining Defendants on the issues of infringement, validity and 12 unenforceability. The Court orders all remaining parties to appear on October 29, 2008 at 10 a.m.
13 and show cause, if any, why summary judgment should not be entered in favor of Defendants on the 14 grounds that none of the patent claims-in-suit are infringed; each of the patent claims-in suit are 15 invalid; and the patent claims-in-suit are unenforceable.

16 In light of this Order, the hearing on October 20, 2008 is VACATED. Defendants' Motions
17 to continue the hearing on Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment and for leave to file a reply in 18 support of their motion to continue is DENIED as moot.

26 ⁵ In its motion, Plaintiff cites two cases as authority that it retains its right to appeal. See
